A PROMISING EARLY TOMATO

"Early Lethbridge" is the name of a new tomato variety being introduced to the home grower and market gardener of Southern Alberta by the Lethbridge Experimental Station.

Early Lethbridge is described as a medium sized, bushy plant producing good sized, smooth, well colored fruits which are excellent for processing or for fresh table use. It is pointed out that it does not require staking and begins to mature its fruits about sixty days after transplanting. Small quantities of seed for trial may be obtained free by writing to the Horticulture Section, Dominion Experimental Station, Lethbridge.

Last year the Earlforth tomato was introduced by this station. It is earlier but less attractive than Early Lethbridge, and it is view of the frost and northern areas. Both varieties are selections from a cross between Farthest North and Polar Circle made some fifteen years ago. Each of these selections has the ability to set fruit at temperatures lower than normal for tomatoes. This trait is most important in view of the low risks associated with coolness and frost at both ends of our growing season.

Grown and tested for several years under the label Lethbridge 3700 section 18-1750 Set. III, the early Lethbridge tomato has shown itself well suited to the variable climate of southern Alberta. Average yields of this variety in 1952 indicate its promise as a leading crop. Plantings up Order chicks and order early chicks is the advice of experts in this line of business. Early chicks make most economical gain and come into production at a suitable date. They are likely to produce a greater number of eggs during the season when the price is attractive. Farmers who think they can go into the hatchery and buy chicks at any time may be disappointed. As a result of previous experience, hatcherymen are playing safe this year and keeping their prices pretty well on a level.

Orders received. Reports indicate approximately 200,000 eggs less in Alberta this year than at the same date last year.

The Famine Relief Committee of the General Conference of Seventh Day Adventists sent $5,000 to northern Europe for use in areas most affected by the recent floods. These include such advice as: "Never drive after drinking," and "Never pass another vehicle on a hill or curve or at a point where the view is obstructed." This pocket sized booklet is being sent to the 225 issuing offices throughout the province and will be available on request.

THE CANADIAN LUTHERAN BIBLE INSTITUTE IS GROWING

The Canadian Lutheran Bible Institute is an interdenominational faith venture and is located in Canmore, Alberta. It has served in sending out trained lay workers to serve in the local congregations, and also directed lives into full time service for the Lord. The school is now inaugurating an expansion program. This is two-fold. To build a boy's dormitory with auditorium.

2. To call a full time evangelist-teacher.

The school has grown to the extent that the present facilities are not adequate and more teaching help is needed. The need for both the Dormitory-Auditorium and full time teacher is unquestioned.

The board of trustees and the CIBI Association unanimously decided to launch out on this expansion program. To cost of the new building program may be about $70,000. This step of faith was taken when there was only about $5,000 in the building fund. As much voluntary labor as possible will be used. It is the conviction of the Board and Association, including the faculty that we should carry out the mandate to start to build as soon as "the frost is out of the ground".

Pastor Allan Hansen of Lynwood, California has been called as a full-time Evangelist-Teacher.

The method of finance is:

1. Acquaint our people with our need.

2. Pray.

Our people will be informed of our plans, but there will be no canvassing by the school. We commend our expansion program to your prayers and interest. God has blessed the ministry of CIBI. South of the border, God's children strengthened and the lives of many have been directed into consecrated service at home and abroad.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY —

PARTY LINE

Jim Said, "I've Never Seen Such Brown Eyes. It's A Funny Name." By Charlotte McCarthy

THE phone shrilled suddenly, drowning out the ticking of the old clock, and filling the kitchen with its clamor. Three long and one short. This call was for the new family which had moved recently to the old farm across the valley. Doris had been fairly burning with curiosity and her father had brought the welcome news from town that there were several daughters . . . one around her own age.

Dad had said, at the supper table last night, that she should go over and visit the new folks; let them know that they had moved to a friendly neighborhood. But she thought that she would wait until her mother got her new voice dress finished. Not that she wanted to show off, but someone had seen the oldest daughter at a party and had mentioned that she was real stylish. Wouldn't it be nice if this new girl her age would start keeping company with Bart Stewart, Jim's best friend, and then the four of them could go on picnics together? For instance, when the young men started playing baseball, as they always did in Mason's meadow between haying and harvest, the two of them could sit on the fence and watch, while Bart and Jim played, instead of listening to the older women talking of pickling and preserving.

Funny that she hadn't seen Jim in the last few days. Probably busy on his potatoes. She took Jim for granted now, and yet she could still remember how embarrassed and proud she had been the first night he had walked her home from church. Everyone knew that Bart was her steady; that was Irene Deans and Herb Bell . . . he had taken up with a strange girl from town, Irene, who later married a widower from Cochrane, still played the organ in Sunday school. Doris had wondered how she had never lived it down.

The phone rang again. This time, one long and two short. She was home. On an impulse, she ran across and eased off the receiver. Evidently Bart was calling. "How'd you get out at the new people's place last night?" You picked the one I liked best, too.

Revisited, she heard Jim's voice. "The old man didn't want to let us in at first. Seems she's pretty young, and he wanted to keep her around. I've never seen such brown eyes. Lena is a funny name . . ."

Well, she had to find out and the sooner the better. Doris replaced the receiver softly. "What are you moaning about?" Her mother's voice was tired but cheerful, an anchor in a lost world. "Remember those weeds growing in a dozen different directions at once?" She pushed the battered hat back and looked at the clock. It was a strand of grey hair winged in the breeze. "Mum, it was a desperate thing. 'Could you and Dad spare me to go to work in town for awhile?' I've got to go. Honest!"

"What would Jim have to say to that?" "What's it got to do with Jim? It's no business of his."

At the stark misery in the young eyes, the older woman turned quickly. "What do you say, honey? If you're that set on going, your Dad won't say a word."

"Gee, I'll get the cows. The feed down in the pasture were chewing them to pieces when I got them last night." She patted her mother's shoulder with gentle awkwardness. "I'll just have to leave you and Dad."

Going down the path, the tears she could no longer keep back splashed on the front of her dress. The farmer was almost over, and the wild roses by the fence were fading fast; their velvety petals, like ghosts of broken dreams, drifting softly to the ground.

After the chores were finished, Doris huddled miserably on the back porch. A single star shone over the poplar on the hill, and an owl howled its eternal question from the grove beyond. Suddenly the little, square-shouldered form of Jim Porter jogged out of the dusk, and dropped on the step beside her.

"I have news for you, Jim. I've decided to go away to work soon, and meet some new folks. I don't intend to spend the rest of my life in the valley."

"Why, Doris?" He peered through the gloom. "I'd always figured you and I'd be married. I even had a surprise for you. That new man has a herd of sheep and I bought a little beauty from him . . . sort of cream colored, with the biggest, roundest eyes. He tried to tell me an older cow, but somehow I thought you'd like this one. Name's Lena though. I guess it doesn't matter what her name is."

The star was suddenly very near . . . and breath-takingly beautiful. "Oh, but it does matter, Jim." Her hand was warm on his arm, where the smooth muscles rippled under the skin. "It matters a whole lot what the cow's name is!"

Goldfields, Boom Town, Is Being Moved To New Site

SASKATOON — Goldfields, a ghost mining town since the northwestern Saskatchewan gold rush which it was born peopled out 10 years ago, now is being wiped off the map in the wake of the uranium rush. Remaining buildings in Goldfields, on the north shore of Lake Athabasca 500 miles north of Saskatoon, are being moved across the lake ice to the new, thriving town of Uranium City which sprang up 10 miles away last year during Saskatchewan's second uranium sticking run.

The move symbolizes the switch in importance in Saskatchewan from the "old minerals" to uranium. It also heralds the greatest year so far in the history of mineral development in the province.

In virtually every mineralized location north of the 50th parallel, hundreds of prospectors and mining men are probing and listening for the uranium. Fabulous claims have been made for many discoveries and even more startling reports are likely to be made as knowledge of more recent finds becomes public.

Near Uranium City, in the 500-square-mile Beaverledge uranium field, two mines are scheduled to go into production early this year, one by the federal Crown corporation, Eldorado, and the other by a private company. Discoveries in the area

SASKATCHEWAN BOASTS RADIO-ACTIVE HIGHWAY

REGINA — Existence of what is probably the world's only radio-active highway was disclosed to members of the Saskatchewan Legislature. James Ripley (L.-Athabasca) told the Legislative public accounts committee that two truckloads of uranium ore from a uranium mine in the Lake Athabasca area were mistakenly dumped into a highway for fill. The highway is 13 miles long and leads from the uranium mines to the will be proved up after the snow goes.

Just north of the 55th parallel, similar activity is forecast for properties near Lac La Ronge, farther east and 130 miles north of Prince Albert.

Between Lac La Ronge and Athabasca lies the chain of narrow waterways known as the Foster lakes. Here, according to sketchy reports leading out of the area, Saskatchewan is likely to find rich mineral deposits.

Uranium ore is reported in addition to deposits of cobalt, zinc, copper, gold and silver.

The area's nearness to Lac La Ronge—it is only 113 air miles from the northern settlement—indicates that it may be of more importance to the province than the Beaverledge field, which is really accessible only from Waterways, the end of steel just across the border in Alberta.

Before any diamond drilling is done, claims have to be probed and trenced and samples of ore analyzed. The results must show that the claims are rich enough to warrant expenditure of many hundreds of thousands of dollars in drilling programs.

Already, since it became important late last year, more than 900 claims have been staked in the Foster lakes area. The major holdings are by Eldorado.

Percentage of Price Increases in Canada since 1941

INDEXES SHOW IMPLEMENT PRICES AT LOW LEVEL OF INCREASE

That implement prices have been kept at a low level is clearly shown by the comparison of Dominion Bureau of Statistics index figures, which give an increase in "all commodities" since 1941 of 82.3% as against an increase in a comparable index for Massey-Harris implements of only 66.5%. This low percentage of increase, too, is shown in the face of an increase in the index figure for materials of 93.9% and of Massey-Harris hourly rates of pay of 165% as can be seen by referring to the chart shown above.

Also, the indexes show that while farm implements have only increased 66.5%, there has been an increase in the price of farm products of 93.8% and the scarcity of farm labour has caused farm wage rates to climb to 175.3%. The partial absorption of the increased costs of materials and labour has been made possible by the continued great world demand for farm mechanization giving a volume that permits a low ratio of selling expenses and high operating efficiency in manufacturing.

It is past the middle of March already, but the months do fly. We are not sorry that winter is just about over for another year because spring is coming and it is such a wonderful season. In all parts of Canada people are waiting for the day when they can walk anywhere and breathe in the longed for smell of spring, the perfume of flowers blooming. It is hard to describe each individual smell for they are all full of sweetness and sunshine. Spring has so many treasures, the plants are breaking forth into blossom, the trees are bursting with budding leaves and the animal kingdom is bringing forth a host of new arrivals, fleet, lamb, gangly-legged colts and floppy little balls of fur that are kittens and puppies.
